

children; the number of people suffering from burn-out is on the rise.

- ● ● living conditions for people without papers or residency permits are worsening,
- ● ● waiting lists for child day care are growing,
- ● ● there are not enough sign language interpreters and personal assistants for people with disabilities.

These crisis effects are not in the public eye. The results are handled in the private sector and solved individually. In general, it is women who are made responsible for solving the problems, who „for love“ accept being exploited as normal. The crisis of reproduction is a global and diverse crisis that we can only confront with global resistance – resistance that has already begun. We are fighting separation and isolation with solidarity and are developing collective strategies.

A revolution does not have to begin in factories. We learn from rural, indigenous, anti-colonial and feminist movements. We stand side by side with the resistance in factories and we are expanding the resistance to the reproduction sector. Here, unpaid exploitation is cutting labour costs considerably, increasing profits, becoming part of the capitalist logic of valorisation.

Taking a broader view allows new perspectives and strategies for a life without capitalism. There are already numerous approaches all over the world that focus on life and living. In every country where the Troika enforces cutback measures and impoverishment, alternatives to capitalistic production - solidarity and resistance -are developing. We share our solidarity with those who are affected by the war of the rich against the poor. We share our solidarity with those who come together to build a new life and resist the destruction of mankind and nature.

Capitalism is the crisis, every day, all over the world. Since 2008 it has spread to regions that until recently have been in the slipstream of capitalism. We will carry resistance from the fringe of the crisis to the heart of the European crisis regime. We will mix the blockupy protests in Frankfurt with feminist mobilisation:

Take away the basis of patriarchy and capitalism:
focus on life!
